

Can a locker be placed on the balcony

Overview

Where should a balcony be installed?

To avoid any contentions, you can plan to install your balcony at the rear or at the side where your neighbour's privacy is not compromised. To negate the jeopardy of loss of light to your neighbour, using a perforated metal deck can be a better option than going for solid overhead platforms.

Do you need planning permission for a rear balcony?

Rear balconies, which extend from the rear of a property, can provide an outdoor space for residents to enjoy. However, the impact of these balconies on neighbouring properties, such as loss of light, privacy, or the visual appearance of the area, may trigger the need for planning permission.

Why should a balcony be a security hazard?

They need to be carefully designed to avoid any negatives: they can be a security risk, making access to upper levels easier for anyone intent on breaking in, especially if the balcony is within easy reach of a wall or fence that can be climbed on, and they can cause neighbour disputes if there are concerns over privacy.

What are building regulations for balconies?

Building regulations set out specific requirements for the design, construction, and safety of buildings, including balconies. These regulations provide technical guidance to ensure that balconies meet the necessary standards for structural stability, fire safety, and accessibility.

Can a barbecue be used on a balcony?

Barbeques should not be used on balconies. The January 2020 Advice note states "Particular attention should be paid to any risk of fire spread from balconies and other attachments containing combustible materials".

Do you need a local planning authority to build a balcony?

Regulations set by the local planning authority: Local planning authorities may have specific regulations in place regarding balconies, which can vary depending on the area and the authority's planning policies. It is essential to consult the local planning authority for guidance on balcony development requirements.
